FROM THE EDITOR . . .

Your Editor is gratified by the positive response to her recent column. Along with that admonishment goes this charge. Achieving the goal of first-class research cannot be done easily, but the effort will prove worthwhile and rewarding.

Our membership is at an all-time high. Many of the faraway members rely on our publications and your Editor strives to balance the Journal contents with material that is of interest to the largest number of members. Therefore, submissions that pertain to Middle Tennessee and have a broad coverage of that area are welcome. "How to" articles, legal particulars of early times, articles covering interpretation of documents, and methodology are also examples of what can be used. Articles from authors who have extensive experience dealing with early handwriting, migration patterns, or abstracting unpublished material from the State Archives will also be welcomed—just to name a few.

We are an organization that is dependent upon volunteer assistance. We are only as good as you make us. Please take time to review the Journal Policy and Information sheet on the inside back cover and send us any appropriate material for possible publication.

Alexander Martin, North Carolina Governor, and the Martin, Henderson, Rogers, and Searcy Connections of Tennessee

By Charles D. Rodenbough¹

THE PUBLIC RECORD OFTEN IS THE SINGLE AVAILABLE INDICATION OF THE migration of a family in the eighteenth and early nineteenth century in America. There are some routes of migration that were used by thousands and so give us a glimpse of the difficulty of the trip. Less frequently do we have information about the factors that motivated the migration. At an earlier time, European migration and emigration could frequently be attributed to the ravages of war or religious persecution. In America, those factors did not predominate and migration of a family was not always the result just of economics. This article deals with these motivational factors within one extended family. Generally the influence centered on one person, Governor Alexander Martin of North Carolina, but it involves many individuals and several prominent families that ultimately assumed positions of leadership, particularly in Middle Tennessee.

Alexander Martin (1740-1807) was elected Governor of North Carolina for six one-year terms and served as acting Governor on two emergency occasions.² He was Governor when North Carolina stretched to the Mississippi River.³ During his term the state first ceded the Western lands to the national government then rescinded that action and he issued "A Manifesto" that declared the state of Franklin illegal.⁴ As a young lawyer, he was an advisor to Daniel Boone and later was a friend of young Andrew Jackson.⁵ It was Jackson who gave to Martin the first proof leading to the Glasgow Land Scandal which came to involve so many leaders in North Carolina and Tennessee.⁶ It was Martin, as US Senator, who confirmed to the Senate the letter which led to the impeachment of Tennessee Senator William Blount.⁷ Finally, it was Martin who was honored by the tremontaine people when they established Martin Academy, reputed to be the "first legislative action taken anywhere west of the Alleghenies, for the encouragement of learning."⁸

Martin's father, Hugh, had emigrated from County Tyrone, Ireland, and his mother, Jane Hunter, from County Antrim.⁹ Both their families were part of the Scotch-Irish flow of settlement and they located in Hunterdon County, New Jersey. In the next generation, most members of the Hunter and Martin families moved, first to the Valley of Virginia, then into North Carolina.

By the time of Alexander Martin's death, it had been the course and influence of his public life that had directed the lives of many of his friends and relatives. For some of them, that meant a move over the mountains into Tennessee. The Armstrong brothers, Martin and John, friends and associates at Surry County (North Carolina) Court, were appointed entry taker and surveyor for the military bounty lands around Nashville and for East Tennessee respectively.¹⁰ The Bounty Lands represented the commitment of North Carolina to repay those men who had served the state during the Revolution, and Alexander Martin, by virtue of his service as an officer of the Line and as Governor had pledged to promulgate the acts of the state legislature, and was therefore bound to see effective distribution of those acres.

Francis McNairy was Martin's neighbor at Martinville, the county seat of Guilford County, North Carolina. In 1787, when Martin had returned from Philadelphia after serving as a delegate of North Carolina to the Constitutional Convention, it was certainly with McNairy, his son John, and John's young friend, Andrew Jackson, that Martin described the debate of the summer in Philadelphia. Jackson and John McNairy had recently completed their studies under Spruce McCay at Salisbury and were now in the process of being licensed in the several county courts of the Piedmont.¹¹ Jackson lived with two friends, Thomas Henderson and Thomas Searcy, at their Martinville store and helped as a clerk.¹² It was through Martin, among others, that John McNairy was named judge in December of the newly created judicial district of Mero in the western district and he, in turn, appointed Jackson as Attorney General for the District.

McNairy and Jackson were joined in their move west by Thomas Searcy, nephew of Martin, who had been appointed Clerk of Court for Mero.¹³

Thomas Henderson was the brother of Richard Henderson, leader of the Transylvania Company, and Samuel Henderson, a member of Boone's party in the establishment of Boonesboro.¹⁴ After Samuel Henderson returned to Rockingham County in 1782,¹⁵ he was sent to the western district as the representative of Governor Martin to Old Tassell, leader of the Cherokees, and to John Sevier, commander of the district militia.¹⁶ Thomas Henderson became Alexander Martin's partner in the acquisition of the confiscated land of Edmund Fanning in Guilford on which the town of Martinville was located and constituted as the Court House.¹⁷ In March, 1778, Henderson married Martin's sister, Anne Jane.¹⁸ They came to own the plantation called "Mt. Pleasant," which adjoined Martin's plantation, "Danbury." A fourth Henderson brother, Pleasant, served as Clerk of the North Carolina Council of State and as private secretary to Governor Martin between 1782 and 1784.¹⁹

These examples demonstrate the attraction that the Western District, and afterwards Tennessee, represented within the extended family of Governor Alexander Martin. Ultimately, it is within the bequests that Martin chose to make in his own will that we find the most composite example of this attraction as cause and effect.

Alexander Martin spent many hours in the composition of his will. He completed his last public service as Speaker of the North Carolina Senate in December 1805 and returned to "Danbury." His will was dated February 20, 1807, but he added important codicils in April, June and September before his death on November 2nd. More than most wills written in his age, his was testamentary, dealing with land, slaves and personal property with explanations as to the significance of each bequest. There are only marginal glimpses of his public life but much of what was important in his private, family life is captured in the will in terms expressing fealty and fraternity.²⁰

Martin owned about 15,000 acres, including town lots in Martinville and Raleigh, when he died. Half of that acreage was in Tennessee. When he came to distribute that land, it is clear that he recognized that he would be directing part of his family into the path of westward migration which he had helped to make part of the future of the United States.

What he called "his entry land" was 5,000 acres which he had acquired through the Land Office in Hillsborough, often referred to as John Armstrong's Office. There individuals could enter a claim for no more than 5,000 acres at the rate of £ 10 per 100 acres. Income to the state for land sales made in this manner went toward redemption of the state's war debt.²¹ This was the westernmost of his land in Tennessee lying near the ore bank on the Mississippi in the northwest part of the state. He picked out five members of his extended family who were veterans of the Revolution. Each already had western bounty land in his own right: Thomas Henderson, his brother-in-law; Pleasant Henderson, married to his niece, Sally Martin; his brothers, James and Robert Martin; and his cousin, James Hunter of Beaver Island. Martin knew that these men very likely were too rooted in North Carolina to move their large families over the mountains. Of the five, only Pleasant Henderson, in the very last years of his life, moved to Carroll County, Tennessee, where he died.²² But for all these veterans, Martin was providing a bequest that was salient.

Thomas Henderson, a dozen years Martin's junior, became a close associate when both men used Martinville as their residence. After Henderson married Jane Martin, they became a part of the immediate family which came to surround Martin at "Danbury." Henderson had been Clerk of Court in Guilford County and, when that county was divided to create Rockingham in 1785, he took the same post in the new county.²³ The Henderson children, Alexander, Nathaniel, Samuel, Thomas, and Fanny, all were legatees of their uncle, Alexander Martin. Their parents were left "Danbury" on the condition that they care for the Governor's mother, Jane, during the remainder of her life. (Since she survived her son by only four days, they quickly came into full possession of the plantation.) Thomas, as a widower, left most of his estate, which included his fifth interest on the Iron Bank Land, to his several children.²⁴ At least two of the Henderson siblings eventually migrated to Tennessee, Samuel and Thomas, Junior.²⁵

Pleasant Henderson, Thomas' younger brother, married the Governor's niece, Sarah Martin.²⁶ In 1797 he moved from Rockingham County to Chapel Hill where he became Steward of the University of North Carolina and operated a store as Henderson & Searcy.²⁷ He migrated from Chapel Hill to Carroll County, Tennessee, in 1830.²⁸

James Martin, Alexander's next oldest brother, settled in Stokes County, North Carolina, after the Revolutionary War. By his first wife he had ten children.²⁹ He married a second time in 1800 and had five more children.³⁰ Aside from his own bounty land,³¹ to which he was entitled as Colonel-Commandant of the Guilford Militia from 1774 to 1781, James had a one third interest in a 5000 acre grant on the Mississippi and Obion Rivers at "Big Clover Lick" which he had located and secured for Robert and James Gallaway in 1788.³² his brother's children by his first wife. The eldest, Sarah, was already the wife of Major Pleasant Henderson and so had already benefitted by his bequeathed interest in the Iron Bank Land. Alexander must have suspected that his brother would also give the benefit of the Tennessee land to his second family of children.

Robert Martin was the first of the five heirs of the western land to convert land to cash. Only two years after Alexander's death, he sold his thousand acres to Alexander McClaran for $4,000. The deed noted that the land was "within the Indian Boundary (their titles not being yet extinguished by Government)." Robert Martin, therefore, had to provide a bond of £ 450 Virginia currency to secure the eventual title to the land "whenever Government shall extinguish the Indian titles..."³³

The Hunter Family had located in North Carolina from New Jersey, via Virginia, almost as early as had Alexander Martin.³⁴ James Hunter had been an active leader in the Regulator Movement which had singled out the excesses of the North Carolina court and legal system as the source of local injustice. Among those leaders of government and court who were beaten in Court House riots was Kings Attorney Alexander Martin. James Hunter was one of the few Regulator leaders who ultimately became an active Patriot in the American Revolution.³⁵ These cousins, products of the Scotch-Irish migration, repeatedly provided dramatic leadership in the creation of civil government and western expansion.

James Hunter, for his service as a Militia Major, had received a 640-acre section as bounty land.³⁶ He also had purchased 2,000 acres on the Obion River which he described as "an undivided part of

5,000 acres granted [James] Martin by North Carolina in 1788.³⁷ When Hunter died in 1821, his will designated that this 2,000 acres, along with his one-fifth interest in the 5,000 acre ore bank land, should be equally divided between his children.³⁸ From this devise the Tennessee lands on the Obion were partitioned in 1827, between Mary Dearing, Rachael Dalton, Samuel Hunter and Pleasant Hunter for one part each and for James and Robert Hunter, grandchildren, to share one part.³⁹ Of these heirs, James Hunter, the grandson, became a doctor and settled and married in Obion County, Tennessee.⁴⁰ Son Samuel Hunter settled for a time Fayette County before he moved his family to Texas.⁴¹ Samuel and James Hunter were commissioners for the building of the Presbyterian Church in Fayette County in 1835.⁴²

Governor Martin and his brothers, James and Robert, had started to acquire land in North Carolina on the upper branches of the Dan river, which contained deposits of iron ore, before 1775. James Martin established the Union Iron Works in Stokes County using a name that had applied to a similar iron works near their birthplace in Hunterdon County, New Jersey.⁴³ As the Revolution began they took advantage of new bounty laws of the Provincial Congress, which encouraged mining of such ore, and took out a number of land warrants. Many were for uncultivated woodland to provide charcoal for the process of an iron works including the lime kiln which James established. This experience with iron manufacturing gave them a background that they could use in the development of the potential of the iron ore bank on the Obion and Mississippi.⁴⁴

Alexander Martin had also acquired 2,314 acres on Big Harpeth River in Davidson County, Tennessee, in 1786.⁴⁵ At the time of his death he had already divested himself of 500 acres of that grant. The residue he directed toward the younger generation of his family. To his "natural son," Alexander Strong Martin, whom he had finally publicly acknowledged in the last year of his life, he assigned 450 acres. The remainder was to be equally divided between four of his nephews: Nathaniel Henderson, son of Thomas and Jane Henderson; and James, Samuel and Robert Rogers, sons of Alexander's sister, Martha, and her late husband, Samuel Rogers.⁴⁶

Martin had 2,000 acres on Duck River in Tennessee which is believed to be the land specifically given to him under an amendment to the "Act for the relief of the Officers and Soldiers of the Continental Line..." in 1783.⁴⁷ There is some confusion on the distribution of this tract. One quarter went to Major Pleasant Henderson who, as Pleasant Henderson, Sr., already had received one fifth of the Iron Bank Land on the Obion. Another quarter went to Alexander Martin, who appears to have been his nephew, son of James Martin. He is also left the Pruitt's Creek land which may just be a further identification of his part of the Duck River whole. The remaining two quarters went to Thomas Searcy, husband of Alexander's niece, Ann Martin, and to Alexander

Martin Rogers, his nephew and namesake.⁴⁸

One final bequest of Governor Martin has a particular connection with Tennessee. Prince, the Governor's trusted slave, "my man Prince," was to be freed upon the death of the Governor's mother and on the condition of meritorious services attested to and "the faithful & meritorious services the said Prince has rendered me in my life time." With particular detail, Martin attempted to guarantee that this wish would be carried out by his heirs and a less than tolerant legal system which was in conflict concerning the legal status of free blacks. The November Term of 1807 Rockingham County Court concluded Prince Martin to be "free and liberated."

He left "Danbury" and in 1808 was recorded as living in Davidson County, Tennessee. When he died there in 1816 he left a small estate as a free black man.⁴⁹

Alexander Martin never entered Tennessee but he recognized that the Western District represented the hope of greatness for the United States. He had a clear sense of the flow of history and he saw westward expansion as inexorable. His will is one place where that view is captured and his beneficence prodded his heirs toward that destiny.

Endnotes

1. This article is based on a larger manuscript biography of Alexander Martin by the author.

2. He was elected to successive one year terms 1782-84 and 1789-1791. He became Governor, by virtue of his position as Speaker of the state Senate, when Governor Burke was taken captive by the British in 1781 and again, briefly acted as Governor in 1805, when the incumbent, James Turner, was too busy to get sworn.

3. After the Treaty of Paris, long held American colonial claims that some state lines extended to the Pacific were generally abandoned but Martin as Governor, in a letter to R. R. Livingston (President of Congress) dated June 24, 1782 noting a map which showed the state extending only to the Mississippi, stated, "we consider ourselves not absolutely bound by, having a previous right by the Charter of Charles the Second — to extend from sea to sea —." John Partain and others vs.
Hardy Hightower and others
(Original Bill Heard in Davidson
County Court)

The Bill of Complaint of Elisha Partin, John Partin, Richmond Partin, Sally Partin, George Twitty and Ginsey Twitty his wife, complainants, against Hardy Hightower, Richard Hightower, Oldham Hightower and Sarah Hightower his wife, Aldred Hightower, and Delia Hightower, who is an infant under the age of twenty-one years, defendants.

Humbly complaining sheweth unto your honor that their father John Partin died in the month of August in the year 1793 in Wilkes County, Georgia, intestate, leaving your orators and oratrixes, Elisha, John, Richmond, Sally and Ginsey, who was then Ginsey Partin, but has since intermarried with your orator George, and Winniford Hooff, who was then Winniford Partin, but has since intermarried with Pater Hooff, Francis Partin, and Sarah Partin his widow, his legal representatives or distributees of personal estate. Complainants shew that no letters of administration were ever taken out on the estate of their said father Elisha the eldest of your orators being at the time of his said father's death not more than twelve years old. Your Orator John has purchased the interest of said George Hooff and Winniford his wife to the negroes in question and in evidence thereof they executed to him their joint deed dated 6 September 1817. Your orator John has also purchased the interest of said Sarah Partin to the said negroes in question and hereafter particularly spoken of and she also on the 17th day of February 1818...executed to him a deed or bill of sale by means of which purchase your said orator John is entitled to three shares out of seven of said negroes belonging to the estate of John, deceased, your orator Elisha to one share, Richmond one share, your oratrix Sally one share, George Twitty and Ginsey his wife one share, said Fanny Partin having departed this life after the death of your orators' said father unmarried and intestate.

Your orators and oratrixes further shew that their said father some time in the year 1792 left his place of residence in Wilkes County, Georgia for the purpose of removing himself and negro family to the state of Kentucky, having at that time the possession and ownership, among other things, of four negroes, one a woman named Cate, one, a negro boy named Luke, another named Henry, another named Joe....

David Cummins, Samuel Cummins and Henry
Cummins vs.
George Fisher and others
(Original Bill Heard in Williamson
County Court)

Your orators David Cummins and Samuel Cummins of Williamson County and Henry Cummins of North Carolina respectfully represent to your honor that about the year 1797 their father Samuel Cummins borrowed about $650 from Richard Trotter ___[illegible] of Salisbury North Carolina Merchant near which place said Samuel then lived to secure the payment of said lien said Samuel mortgaged or pledged to said Trotter two negro slaves one named Join[?] about 20 years of age, the other Dice about 19 years old and delivered possession of said slaves to him, and by their contract said slaves were to remain in said Trotter's possession for the interest of said lien until the money should be paid. Said Samuel in May 1800 died interested leaving your orators his only children and very little personal property besides said slaves and no person ever administered on his estate, your orators David and Samuel being then in Tennessee. Your orators possessed very little property and were unable to raise money to redeem or attempt to redeem said slaves for some time, until sometime in the year 1803....

HANDLING and ORGANIZING HISTORIC PHOTOGRAPHS

By Frances Osborn Robb

Your photographs are significant documents in the history of your family and community. You will lose them forever unless you take steps to preserve them now.

Don't

- touch emulsion (image) side of prints or negatives. Handle edges only.
- cut photos into decorative shapes. The emulsion at the edges is fragile; cuts allow humidity, light, and pollution to destroy the image.
- write on photos with ink or use rubber stamps on front or back
- use scotch or pressure-sensitive tape, paper clips, rubber bands, rubber cement, commercial glues (clear or white).
- put photographs in "magnetic," "sticky page" or other non-archival albums. The acids in these materials will permanently ruin your photographs.
- store photographs in cardboard boxes or unfinished wood drawers.
- store photographs and newspaper clippings face to face. Pulp paper acids will destroy your photographs.
- store photographs in basements, garages, storage buildings or top shelves of closets.
- don't photocopy more often than once every 2 years.

Do

- handle photographs and negatives carefully, by edges only.
- write identifications of people and places, dates, etc. on back lower edge with #2 pencil (don't press hard enough to leave an imprint on the front of the print).

- store special photographs (the ones you would carry out of a burning building) in archival sleeves in an archival box or album (Cadillac-level protection).
- store the bulk of your photographic prints in archival boxes that create a micro-environment that protects photographs from humidity, light, pollution and insects (Chevrolet-level protection).
- store negatives in archival sleeves in a different location (a bank box is ideal).
- place the archival boxes and albums in a filing cabinet or on a bookshelf at floor level or on the next higher shelves. An environment in which you are comfortable is good for photographs too (the drier the better).

Copying Photographs

People copy photographs for two main reasons: (1) to create a decorative element for a room, often by having a photograph enlarged, perhaps handcolored, and put in an appropriate frame; (2) as a basis for genealogical or historical research.

For decor, the sky's the limit. Enjoy cropping, enlarging, coloring or combining images. Enjoy the results.

For research purposes, a two-step approach is best. First, make a working copy of the photograph. Best is a same-size color laser copy on a 7,000 or above model numbered machine. For black and white photos, use the black and white setting. Don't do this more than once every two years. Make photocopies from the laser copy, not from the original (reducing wear and tear on the original). To preserve maximum data, make the laser copy same-size, edge to edge, including cardboard mount, if any, and photocopy the back (same-size) If there is any written or printed matter (like a photographer's name) on it. If the photocopy is not completely legible, transcribe the words on the copy in pencil. Warning: a photo or laser copy is no substitute for the original. These copies will deteriorate. You cannot depend on them to last.

Second, for the most significant photographs in your collection, have a large-size copy negative made of the entire image, including the mount, if any. Store it in an archival sleeve and use it to make high quality copies for research, genealogical albums, or as basis for decorative enlargements. Photographs made this "tried and true" way have lasted for more than a hundred and twenty-five years, plus which, the negative/positive approach gives you a "backup" for replacements of lost or damaged prints.

What about computerizing my special photos? Think twice. The paper and inks are not archival. They are too new for any estimates on longevity. In addition, just as most folks can no longer retrieve music stored on 8-tracks, the machine in which your image is stored may be obsolete in a year or two and the image no longer retrievable. The same goes for computer "enhancement." They are no longer historically accurate images, hence no good for research. Much useful data is lost.

Using Archival Materials

Using archival materials for housing your photographs is the best way for you to help ensure the longest possible life for photographs.

Purchase storage and housing materials only from archival supply companies or art suppliers that can show you the magic initials P.A.T. on the label (P.A.T. means archival: the material has passed the Photographic Activity Test).

Buyer beware! If you did not purchase archival materials in the past, you can be sure 99 44/100% of your photograph storage boxes or albums are not archival and are causing your photographs to deteriorate (worst of all: sticky-page "magnetic" albums).

Quick low-tech test. Open the album or photo folder and take a deep whiff. If it smells musty or chemical, it is damaging your pictures. Do something about it quickly. Plastic photo folders or paper album pages that don't smell funny are second in priority; within the next six months, you should shift the photos in them to archival housing.

Here is a list of reliable sources for archival materials. Your local librarian may be able to suggest others:

Archival materials vary in price from inexpensive archival boxes to medium-priced albums, sleeves, and other housing. They may cost a bit more than "dime-store" materials, but even the handsomest archival albums are less than the non-archival albums in many gift shops. Non-archival materials will not help your photographs, and will most likely damage them irretrievably. Buy and use archival materials (or get someone to give you some for that special birthday) and feel good about protecting your heritage!

Organizing Family Photos

Organizing accumulations of family photographs should have two central aims: (1) assembling, recording, amplifying, organizing, and preserving family history as an ongoing activity, and (2) providing information about the photographs in a way that will not damage them.

An organized collection of family photographs should present an illustrated history of the family. To create such a history you need photographs and words. Images of people and places. Family trees. Interesting events. Names of cousins, connections, friends, and school- and workmates. Names. Dates. Descriptions. Anecdotes. Descriptions. Who? When? Where? Why?

The family photographs least likely to survive are those that are unidentified, adversely housed, and disorganized. A photograph with an inscription is a "Catch-22"- likely to be kept, but often damaged by ink and finger pressure that cause the delicate emulsion layer (the image layer) to be broken or chemically altered. The least damaging inscription is a brief note made at lower edge (well away from the image's "center of interest") with a No. 2 pencil, pressing as lightly as possible.

Each family's accumulation of photographs is different, yet all probably have some things in common. There are usually only a few photographs dating from the 19th century; more from 1900 to 1960, and many more since then. The task can seem overwhelming: break the job down into smaller tasks.

Before you begin, think about your purpose and the form your organization and presentation might take. Who is this project for? If you are doing this for future generations, think about their needs: storage space, lifestyle, interests. Make it easy to understand the family's history. Make it easy to add to the collection. Interpret only the images that you would run back into your burning house to retrieve. House the others, minimally organized, archivally. Store them near the family documents. A later generation may respect your selection of significant family images, but will undoubtedly want to add others. Make it easy for other family members to become actively engaged in the search, identification, and interpretation of their visual history.

Archival storage is the best way to extend a photograph's life. It should be the only way in which you store your photographs. All photographic materials (prints, negatives, and one-of-a-kind positives; e.g. Polaroids, daguerreotypes) are complex and especially vulnerable-artifacts: a thin "skin" bearing the image atop a support of metal, glass, or paper. Image and support are, separately, extremely vulnerable and easily damaged; their interaction also has built-in hazards.

For most people, the combination of archival ring-binder album(s), and archival boxes will provide a flexible organization, housing, and storage for a family collection of photographs. Another archival box should house archival sleeves for negatives and associated prints. The folders you receive your prints and negatives in are not archival. They can damage and destroy your photographs.

Other archival boxes can be used to store family manuscripts, documents, and memorabilia. As you learn more about your family and accumulate new materials, additional pages of photographs and information can be added to your archival album and boxes. Purchase additional boxes as needed.

Think carefully about the best and most suitable size for your archival boxes and album. Think small! The box should house your largest photograph: no larger! The album should be a practical size. Your children may be nomads; if so, an album that fits upright on a standard book shelf (the largest shelf is usually 12 1/2") is far more likely to be kept available and enjoyed than an enormous "coffee table" album.

Begin by sorting your accumulation into smaller groups by generations, sides of the family, events, epochs, and or themes. You may have photographs that go back six or more generations; you are more likely to have photographs that begin four generations back and continue one or more generations forward.

Then divide each group into two parts: the "A" collection (100-150 of your family's most significant and interesting images), and the "B" collection, those worth keeping but not as significant at this point. The A's will get the "Cadillac" treatment in an archival ring-binder album. What makes a photograph belong to the A collection? The images that have passed the "burning building" test!

Perhaps you have a large group of a single event—wedding, golden anniversary, a very special vacation. If the occasion is special enough, it may warrant its own archival album.

The other photographs become the "B" collection. They will get the "Chevy" treatment for now (six months later, you may change your mind—your descendants surely will!). They will be placed in a labeled archival box. Number the most interesting in pencil on the back, lower left; the numbers will correspond to those on a list, kept in the box, that identifies the item and/or provides significant information about it. Someone looking at the "A" album may find an intriguing photograph: the Bicentennial camping trip, a wedding, school pictures. Other photographs in that category will be in one of the archival boxes.

For each page of photographs, you will need a transparent archival sleeve, a sheet of archival mounting paper, and four transparent archival photo corners for each photograph. It is prudent to leave ample room on each page for an additional image or two. Before using acid-free photo corners to locate a photograph on the left page, turn it over and record a title (sitter's name, the occasion, etc.) in #2 pencil, lightly at lower edge back.

You will also need an archival sleeve for the facing page, which will include words, photocopied documents, etc. Each photograph's title will begin its caption. Each caption should include name(s), identification, date or age, place, and genealogical chart number. If the image is a copy, include the name and current address of the owner. If the image is poorly identified, include the exact or approximate size (small, medium, large) of the original (that will make it easier to date the image).

Then, put on your family historian's hat! Record a few sentences of the most interesting things about the sitter, family, occasion—whatever! Anecdotes, descriptions, personal interests, lifeways, connection to big events of local, state, national, and world history. Use sections of family trees as needed.

As you organize your photographs, you will find gaps in the visual record. Try filling these gaps by contacting relatives and connections, schools and other institutions, organizations, churches, and businesses in which your family was involved. Explore the resources of local, regional, and national photographic repositories, from your county historical society to the National Archives and Library of Congress. Combing local newspapers for information about family members may suggest new possibilities. Examination of documents, manuscript material, recordings, artifacts (including books) will provide valuable information to "flesh out" the genealogical skeleton.

Once you have sorted your collection in "A's" and "B's" and housed them archivally, you need to decide where to keep them. Locate them where you feel comfortable. Unless you could live comfortably for the rest of your life in an un-airconditioned attic, damp cellar, metal storage shed, or that warm airless space on top of the closet shelf, don't store your photographs and family memorabilia there.

Now that you have organized your family photographs, you will find them an ongoing source of pleasure, wisdom, and insights. They will become a focus of conversation, remembrances, and anecdotes. Try to resist the temptation to idealize past generations; try not to be bitter over or vindictive about relatives' problems and failings (including divorce). A straightforward, generous-spirited "warts-and-all" approach will ensure that a couple of generations hence you are not viewed as the one with the problem! Have fun! ■

RIDGEWOOD CEMETERY

This cemetery is located about one-half mile due East of Carthage, Tennessee. The road that leads to the cemetery was known as the "Old Walton Trail" in 1937 when the cemetery was copied. According to Mrs. Cora Whitefield, Mrs. Bessie Gibbs, and Miss Hattie Winfree, all of Carthage, Tennessee, who read the stones on March 5, 1937, there were about 65 unmarked graves in the cemetery at that time.

Dating Documents By Watermarks

by Dorothy Williams Potter

WATERMARKS ARE emblems or designs in paper used originally in Italy in the latter part of the 13th century. Watermarking is the technique used to create these patterns or marks in a sheet of paper that are visible when the sheet is held to a light.

Until the middle of the 19th century all watermarks were formed in outline and were produced by the use of metal wires bent to the required design. These wire objects were then sewed to the mold on which the paper was to be formed, the wire leaving its impression in the wet sheet of paper by causing the fibers to lie thinner along its course.

The watermark has a long history as a maker's trademark and as a guarantee of quality. In paper to be used for currency the watermark has a security function, serving as a guarantee of authenticity.

Each papermill tended to use watermarks which were peculiar to the town or region where it was situated. The original Italian watermarks consisted of devices such as crosses, circles, triangles and other forms of the simplest kind that could readily be twisted in wire. Later Italian marks, in addition to the Greek cross, were the bow and arrow, hammer and anvil, the spoked wheel and the scales. By the eighteenth century in central Italy the fleur-de-lys in a single or double circle was widely used as a variation of a device which had been in use centuries earlier.

Some watermarks lasted over many hundred years: for example, from the end of the fourteenth cenring watermarks during each century, so it is obvious that although watermarks can be helpful in determining the age of a sheet of paper, and consequently of a document or print, careful judgment is necessary when examining them.

The ordinary watermarks in hand-made paper of the present day are made in the same manner as used since the inception of the art, the only difference being in the employment of finer wire and greater skill in its formation. This naturally gives a brilliant and clear-cut watermark. In machine-made paper a wire cylinder known as a "dandy-tury to the beginning of the seventeenth, the Gothic "p" was used in various designs. Another very popular watermark was the ox-head.

In England, from about 1794 onwards, some papermills, such as Whatman's, used as a watermark their own trade name followed by the year of manufacture. This makes it possible to determine fairly accurately the date when an impression was taken, because engravers or publishers did not normally keep stocks of paper but bought sheets as they needed them. However, there were recurring watermarks during each century, so it is obvious that although watermarks can be helpful in determining the age of a sheet of paper, and consequently of a document or print, careful judgment is necessary when examining them.

Often an artist, author, or his publisher will order expensive paper with a watermark which is partly to serve as a protective 'trademark' for the original edition. Watermarked paper has, in any case, become traditional over the centuries. ■

An Old 1813 Maury County, Tennessee, Letter

Pulgrims Rest Maury County
July 22, 1813

Dear Sister:

I hope you will excuse my not writing to you sooner. I had nothing worth your attention to write and have not now only that we are all in good health and ought to be very thankful to Him who bestows these blessings. Sister Henderson is in the family way, if she has no misfortune she will be confined in January. Male or female it will be called for our family. If a son, Hacket, if a daughter, Cynthia Hacket.

Sister wishes you to tell mother we are very well pleased with our new situation. W. Henderson is improving his little place very fast the ground is fertile. My dear sister I wish that our beloved mother and all of you were living in this county for it is far preferable to Rhea [County].

The society is very good I am always treated with attention at home and abroad by young and old. W. Henderson and sister are very kind to me and say that I am welcome to stay with them until I get married. You wrote that William would come for me in the fall but we think that you could ill spare him and the road is deligate to find and a great part of it wilderness and I would rather you would not send him but if you are very anxious I shall return this fall. Write me soon and I will endeavor to get company if I can.

My wants are generally supplied. W. Henderson got me a new bonnet the other day of the first fashion a shade likewise and several packs, Capes, stockings and a number of other parts of dress, I have got since I came here.

I have made grate proficiency in working needle work. I have worked me a cambric pock and some capes and sister a toilet.

You recollect that my horse run away last summer at which I not much sorry on my account for W. Henderson has gave me a much better one. Tell mother not to give herself one moments unesness on my account for I am doing as well here as if I was at home and perhaps better in the end.

Dear sister we are sepperated by hills and mountains but our thoughts no doubt are frequently on one another and may our prayers be continually assending to heaven for our welfair. The Lord has promised that he will be a father to the fatherless and a husband to the widow if they will only put there trust in Him.

Dear sister we have our earthly parent no more but the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, and blessed be the name of the Lord for he is just sutch a father as we need. He can supply all our wants out of his fullness and O may he be our guide through life's slipry paths and in the end take all of us home to himself.

W. Henderson and sister joins with me in sending thar love to our death mother and all the family. Kiss little Hariat for me. All the children and servants desire to be remembered to you. Give my love to all inquiring friends. Write me soon....

I remain your loving sister while life's warm fluid continues to flow in the heart of

Cynthia W. Hacket

1. This letter in October 1938 was in the possession of Judge R. W. Smartt, McMinnville, Tennessee, at which time it was transcribed by copyist, Anna Lee Morrison.

Hackett Notes Supplied by Betty M. Majors

"The Hacketts were from Rhea County and I believe all descendants from Rev. War Veteran John Hackett. The Hackett girls all married in Rhea County:

Anne R. Hackett to Jesse Coffee, 9/9/1871

Cynthia W. Hackett to Luke Colville, 1/9/1815

Elizabeth Hackett to Richard C. Waterhouse, 1/1/1816

Mary Hackett to James Moore, 12/2/1812

Jean Hackett to Robert Henderson, 11/28/1798

"Elizabeth Hackett Waterhouse was the second wife of Gen. William C. Smartt. Of the above girls, the first three have definitely been located in Warren County.

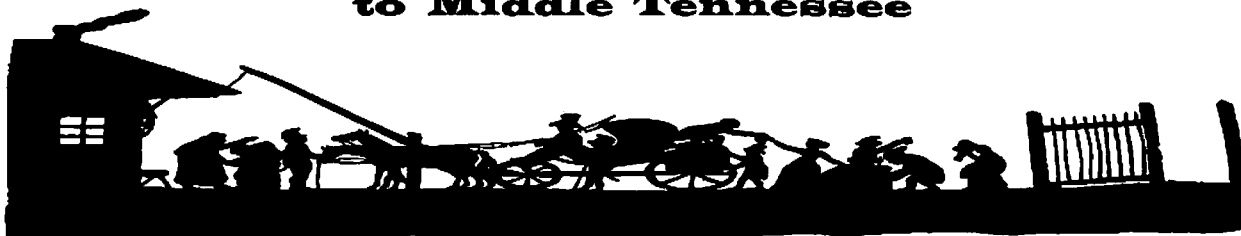

"Cynthia Hackett was born 14 Dec. 1792 and died 26 Sept. 1842. She was the first wife of Major Louis Colville, son of Joseph and Sarah (Lusk) Colville.

"Elizabeth Hackett Waterhouse, second wife of Maj. Smartt was born 22 Feb. 1791 and died 1 May 1864. They married in 1828.

"In her will, Elizabeth Hackett Waterhouse Smartt (undated, but probated 7 July 1865 in Warren County Will Book 4, p. 143), she names the following children: Euclid Waterhouse, Ann Smartt, Vester Colville, Asenath Smartt, William H. Smartt, and Martha Ramsey.

"The Ann Smartt named here is Ann Waterhouse, daughter of Elizabeth and her first husband Richard G. Waterhouse. She married George W. Smartt, son of Wm. C. Smartt by his first wife Margaret Colville."

TENNESSEE COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA, DEED ABSTRACTS, 1789-1797

Early Records of Robertson, Montgomery, Stewart, Dickson, Houston, Hickman, Humphreys and Cheatham Counties

Transcribed by Yolanda G. Reid, Robertson County Historian

TENNESSEE COUNTY was formed in the fall of 1788 and was the third county created in what we now know as Middle Tennessee. The county seat of Tennessee County was Clarksville. The land within this county encompassed what is today known as Montgomery, Robertson, Dickson, Houston, Stewart, parts of Hickman, Humphreys and Cheatham Counties, Tennessee.

The importance of this material lies not only in their early date, but also that many of these are grants for Revolutionary War service.

The Tennessee County deed records are found on microfilm as Montgomery County, Tennessee, Deed Book A. Page numbers given here are the actual page numbers found in Deed Book A and on the microfilm. Surname spelling is given as originally written, but the word "registered" is indicated as "reg." in this series. —YGR

The Nine Capitals of the United States

This is a story and a short history lesson about how the Revolutionary War and subsequent events, from 1774 to 1801, caused the capital to move. During those seventeen years government business was conducted in nine cities: Philadelphia (five times), Baltimore, Lancaster, York, Princeton, Annapolis, Trenton, New York City, and Washington, D.C.

In 1774, Philadelphia was chosen for the original meeting of the First Continental Congress because, with a population of 40,000, it was the metropolis of America. Seven newspapers were then published there. As we are frequently reminded, it was the home of Benjamin Franklin. The Capitol building chosen in Philadelphia was Carpenter's Hall, preferred by the delegates to the State House that had been offered. As reported by John Adams, the record notes: "The members met at the City (Or Smith's) Tavern at ten o'clock and walked to the Carpenter's Hall, where they took a view of the room and of the chamber where is an excellent library....The question was put whether we were satisfied with this room? It was passed in the affirmative."

After two months in Philadelphia, the first of an even dozen moves of the seat of government was to Baltimore in December 1776, because of the advance of the British army through New Jersey. Then, after 10 weeks in Baltimore, back to Philadelphia again, but only for six months.

Next to Philadelphia, Lancaster was the most important town in Colonial Pennsylvania at that time. On the main route to the West, it was a leading trading center for the fur trade and, with a population of 3,773, making it one of the larger colonial towns. To avoid the enemy the delegates took a roundabout way to Lancaster and there held one session, primarily concerned with military matters.

Soon after a resolution was passed to "... direct the Board of War to co-operate with General Washington in devising and carrying into execution the most effectual measures for supplying the Army." Before adjournment it was decided to "... repair to the town of York, in Pennsylvania."

The first session in York was convened on September 30, 1777; the last on June 27, 1778. An early matter of business was the resignation of John Hancock as its president, after having served for two-and-a-half years during troublesome times. He was succeeded by Henry Laurens of South Carolina, elected by unanimous vote.

During the nine months that York was the capital of the U. S. several significant events occurred. They were military victories in the North, highlighted by Burgoyne's surrender at Saratoga, and an alliance with France consummated on February 6, 1778. At that time Ben Franklin was the American representative in Paris and he made the most of the victory at Saratoga. Also, news reached the Congress at York that the British had evacuated Philadelphia and it was now safe to return there.

Philadelphia was always thought of as the continental capital and with the British departure a resolution was passed on June 25 that it adjourn "... from this place to meet at Philadelphia, on Thursday, the second of July next." Further, a resolution was adopted "... to appoint a committee of three to take proper measures for a public celebration of the anniversary of independence at Philadelphia on the 4 day of July next."

Back in Philadelphia there was much disagreement with regard to the ratification of the Articles of Confederation. Questions of land grants, taxes, State vs. Federal authority, etc. were difficult to resolve. "The thirteen States were not yet ready to grant to a central government what they had just so recently refused to allow to an Imperial Parliament." The principal concern was the winning of the War for Independence, which was brought to a successful conclusion with the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, Virginia, on October 19, 1781.

Quoting from the booklet: "But the conduct and the winning of the war were not the only responsibilities and new interests multiplied in vexatious quantity....One of the principal causes of this condition, as well as sign of it, was the sad state of the public finances."

Beginning in June 1783, Congress wandered from place to place: "Driven from Philadelphia by the jibes and taunts of a band of drunken ploughmen, it flees to Princeton...From Princeton it adjourns to Annapolis and from Annapolis to Trenton, from Trenton to New York. Meanwhile the press is making merry."

Finally, after New York City and Philadelphia once again, the Congress settled permanently in Washington, D.C. A quorum for business was first secured there on February 2, 1801. And they're still there.¹

BOOK REVIEWS

by Shirley Wilson, CG

Mecklenburg County, North Carolina Minutes of the Court of Common Pleas and Quarter Sessions Volume III:1821-1830 transcribed by Herman W. Ferguson. Softback 8 1/2 x 11, 251 pp., index, map, c1998. $25 from author, 600 Chad Drive, Rocky Mount, NC 27803-1512.

The title of this book says it all. It is chock full of good information on the folks who lived in Mecklenburg County during this period of time. It is important to note that Ferguson has transcribed rather than abstracted the records. This permits readers to make their own interpretation of what is written. Court minutes are an excellent source for locating low profile ancestors who avoid the census taker and depart before the tax collector comes around.

By necessity the print is small but very clear with names in bold type. An excellent index and a map showing the creeks serve to enhance the usefulness of the book. This is an excellent "user friendly" reference book that those with roots in North Carolina will want to include in their libraries. This book is a fine example for anyone who might want to start compiling similar records.

Mecklenburg & Cabarrus Counties, North Carolina Decedents for Whom Loose Estate Papers are Extant compiled by Herman W. Ferguson. Softback 8 1/2 x 11, 70 pp., c1998 $14 from author (see above address).

This is an index to loose estate papers for Mecklenburg and Cabarrus counties that are preserved at the North Carolina Archives. Divided into two alphabetical listings, one for each county, the book lists the name of the decedent and the approximate death date. It covers the time period from about the mid 1750s to the 1940s. This is a large collection of approximately 9,750 files.

Once the reader identifies a file of interest, the files can be ordered from North Carolina by a process explained in the preface. Original estate papers are a good source of fascinating and helpful genealogical information that cannot normally be found in book format. Ferguson has produced a publication offering excellent value for a very modest price.

Our Nunnally/Nunley Family by Jean Nunley Dennison. Hardback 7 x 10, 472pp., bibliography, illustrations, index, photographs, c1997. $32 plus $4 postage from author, 919 Waterswood Drive, Nashville, TN 37220.

Richard Nunnally was born about 1640 and is found in the early records of Henrico County, Virginia. The book follows his many descendants, but it also includes information on the Welker, Niswonger, Ferrill, Biggs, Cherry and Eastwood families. Some of the counties in Tennessee where they settled are Grundy, Davidson, Stewart, Hickman and Humphreys. This is a well organized and carefully researched family history. It can claim another asset frequently lacking in similar books. Footnotes abound and the book contains a whole chapter devoted to transcripts of pertinent documents. Drawings, illustrations, photographs and a good index all serve to make this book of special value to those with an interest in these families.

Tennessee Land Grants by Barbara, Byron and Samuel Sistler. Softback 8-1/2 x 11 in 17 volumes, 1998. Order from Byron Sistler & Associates, Inc., 1712 Natchez Trace, PO Box 120934, Nashville, TN 37212. Prices listed below. Tennessee residents add 8.25% sales tax.

This information is from the land grant card file at the Tennessee State Library and Archives. Arranged alphabetically by name, each entry shows the name of the grantee, the county and year of the grant, acreage, district, book and page number of the grant, and grant number along with occasional notations. There is also a separate Cross Index that lists prior entry and warrant holders referenced throughout the regular listings.

The time period covered is from the settlement of Tennessee in the 1770s up to the very early days of the 20th century.

For those who don't have access to the Tennessee State Library and Archives in Nashville, this will provide extremely helpful information. Order the booklet by the surname of interest. Prices vary according to the size of the booklet.

HOW A NEW JERSEY PRIVATE SETTLED IN MIDDLE TENNESSEE

The Experiences of a Soldier in the American Revolution

Contributed by Marvin D. Owens

On December 3, 1832 Ezekiel Billington of Bedford County, Tennessee, was granted a Revolutionary War pension of $53.33 per annum. Unable to read or write, Ezekiel had dictated a long, rambling story of his experiences in the Revolution to Justices Samuel Phillips, John B. Armstrong and John L. Neil of the Bedford County Court of Pleas on August 16, 1832. The title of the court record is "The Declaration of Ezekiel Billington in Order to Obtain the Benefits of the Act of Congress Passed June 7, 1832."

Because of the length of the application, the account that follows is an abstract, whenever exact words from the application are used, they are set off by quotation marks. No page numbers are used because the pages were not numbered in the original application, numbered W8354.

Ezekiel Billington "entered the service of the United States under Capt Abram Garrabrant and Colonel Joseph Allen of Newark in the state of New Jersey in the spring of the year 1776 at Elizabeth Town point...as a volunteer..." After serving a month Ezekiel was dismissed, but volunteered two additional times in 1776, under different officers. During Ezekiel's third enlistment, about 20 of the members of his New Jersey Militia were attacked from the rear by British soldiers. Several Militiamen were killed, but Ezekiel and a few others were captured. "Those captured with applicant were taken to the city of New York and put in a sugar house where there were a great many other prisoners who all suffered with—hungar and cold and many died..."

Ezekiel and other prisoners accepted the "proposition from the enemy" to join them rather than remain in prison....Sent to a British vessel off "Statton Island," Ezekiel made plans to jump ship and swim to shore once darkness fell. However, he revealed his plan to one John Tucker, a fellow capturee, who in turn informed authorities. when "a sargent with a file of men" came to arrest Billington, Tucker admitted his role, whereupon Ezekiel engaged his former friend in a fight. The result was that Ezekiel suffered "a severe wound on the hand" which required confinement on a hospital ship.

In the fall of 1777 Ezekiel, his wound healed, was put aboard the transport William, part of a fleet being sent to Savannah, Georgia. However, a storm separated the fleet, and the sloop Chisoway was sent to retrieve the American prisoners—now conscripts in the British Army—so they could be marched overland first to Savannah, then to Augusta, and finally to Hudson's Ferry.

After serving in several battles at several locations between the British and the Americans with their French allies, Billington found an opportunity to escape the British army and join the American army led by General Greene. Ezekiel "remained with General Greenes army about 12 months until April 1780..." engaging in several battles and undergoing some unusual experiences. By now "...about 21 years of age..." Billington requested and received a discharge.

Upon leaving the colonial army, Billington started walking back to Newark. On his way home he stopped in Cumberland County "...in order to work to get some clothing he then being very naked..." After remaining in Cumberland County for some time he "...attached to People of his acquaintance..." who were "...burning...an overland from Cumberland County." Billington went back and forth among several counties in North Carolina and Tennessee before settling in Bedford County, Tennessee, in 1810.

In an interesting portion of his testimony to the judges at his hearing, Billington told that "...while a single man in North Carolina [he] left his discharge that was given him by General Greene in a Chest of Betty Jones in Wane [sic] County together with a commendation given him by General Greene in allusion to [his] capture and imprisonment..." While searching for them he found they had been "...made into a paste board for a woman's bonnet..."

Ezekiel Billington died September 29, 1848, in Marshall County, Tennessee. His widow, his second wife Esther, was assigned his pension. No mention of the name of his first wife is given in the application papers. ■

MINUTES OF THE SUPERIOR COURT of NORTH CAROLINA and MERO DISTRICT

Abstracted and annotated by Dorothy Scott Johnson

For a complete introduction to this material please refer to Issue Number 1 of Volume XII, p. 43. All legal definitions are taken from Black's Law Dictionary, Fifth Edition and will hereafter be referred to as "Black's." Many abbreviations in this work are not in Black's and appear to be the original clerk's own brand of legal shorthand. Since no log exists explaining the meaning of these abbreviations, it is necessary to use them as they are written.

Unless so stated otherwise, the page numbers given here are the pages of the WPA typed material, with the original page number in parenthesis.

Genealogical Note: Court was held in Nashville at the courthouse in all cases. At the time of these minutes the Cumberland River ran on the north edge of Nashville. There were no bridges, so all crossings were done by ferry. Armed with this knowledge, you can determine how far your ancestor lived from the courthouse if he or she was a witness in a case and claimed mileage and/or ferriage. If he claimed ferriage, of course, he lived across the Cumberland River from Nashville. Four ferriages means two trips from his home over the river and back. For example, in the case of Thomas Smith, given below, we can deduce he lived four miles from the courthouse on the north side of the Cumberland River. DSJ.

Edmondson, William	Ridley, George
Gleaves, Michael	Taylor, Thomas

Verdict: The defendant is not guilty as charged.

Samuel Kerr vs. Reese Porter et al

William Loggans, witness, proved one days attendance

WPA p. 213 (Orig. p. 180) Tuesday, 10 November 1796

Parks vs. Stump

William Loggans, a witness, proved two days attendance and two ferriages. Pleasant Kerby proved five days attendance, 25 miles and two ferriages. Joseph Barns proved ten days attendance, 60 miles and two ferriages.

Court adjourned till tomorrow morning 9 o'clock

WPA p. 213 (Orig. p. 180) Thursday, 12 November

1796

Present: Hon. John McNairy, Archibald Roane & William C. C. Claybourne, Judges.

Government vs. Phelty Hurst.

Case: Grand Jury indictment for horse stealing.

Particulars: The prisoner, Phelty Hurst, was brought to the bar and charged as follows:

In Robertson Co., Mero Dist., Tennessee, Phelty Hurst, laborer, on 1 August 1796, with force and arms stole one gelding of a grey color valued at $50 which belonged to James Crabtree; also one sorrel mare valued at $50 belonging to William Padfield.

Plea: Not guilty

Jury:

Britton, Thomas	Hankins, William
Buckhanon, David	Harney, Thomas
Buckhanon, John	Hooper, Joseph
Cheatum, Anderson	Neville, George
Edmondson, William	Ridley, George
Gleaves, Michael	Taylor, Thomas

Verdict: The jury found Hurst guilty as charged.

Government vs. Phelty Hurst

Action: Motion for new trial made and arguments heard. Denied.

Having been found guilty of horse stealing and being called to the Bar and asked if he had anything to say as to why the sentence of law should not be pronounced against him saith nothing. It is, therefore, ordered and decreed by the Court that you, Phelty Hurst, be taken to the public whipping post and there to receive on your bair [sic] back 39 lashes well laid on and stand in the pillory one hour and have both your ears nailed thereto and cut off, and shall be branded on the right cheek with the letter H three-quarters in width and one inch in breadth. He is to be branded on the left cheek with the letter T of the same dimentions in a plain and visible manner and that the Sheriff of Davidson County put this sentence in execution on 18 November 1796 between the hours of ten and twelve a. m.

Adjourned till tomorrow 9 o'clock.

WPA p. 214. (Orig. p. 181)
Friday, 13 November, 1796.

Present: Hon. John McNairy, Archibald Roane, William C. C. Claybourne, Judges.

Jacob Turney, Bail

William Hankins, bail for Jacob Turney, delivered Turney up in discharge of his obligation.

Government vs. Jacob Turney

Case: Grand Jury Indictment for Burglary.

Particulars: The prisoner, Jacob Turney, late of Sumner County, was brought to the Bar and charged with burglary. On 10 June 1796 at a late hour in the night, with force and arms, at the mansion house of John Caffree, Turney did break and enter and did steal and carry away two pieces of bacon (valued at $2.), and two pieces of lead (weighing 50 lbs. valued at $5.). At the house of William Bowman, in Sumner County, he stole and took away two beehives (valued at $1.).

Plea: Not guilty
